This pioneering volume places the role of women within the history of the interwar years, when both the women's and socialist movements became prominent, and raises the key question of how power was distributed between the genders in a historical setting. The question resounds throughout their ensuing examination of the national histories of women and socialism/socialism and women in Western Europe in the 1910s and 1920s. They and their co-authors provide much empirical historical evidence about the political, economic, and ideological components of an answer to this question.
